

RTD begins the Denver Downtown Rail Reconstruction Project which will impact light rail travel downtown

RTD begins work in September to continue the multi-phased project to reconstruct miles of original light rail track in downtown Denver. This phase of the reconstruction project will focus on the at-grade rail located near the intersection of Kalamath Street and Colfax Avenue. <Your organization name> and RTD are partnering to keep the community informed about the Downtown Rail Reconstruction Project.

The work is part of a multi-year, $152 million project to reconstruct miles of light rail track in downtown Denver, the first project of this magnitude in RTD's history. The initial phase, which took place in 2024, included completion of full-depth reconstruction of five intersections in Denver's Downtown Loop.

Here is what to expect:

- Coinciding with the Aug. 31 service changes, D Line trains will be rerouted to Denver Union Station.
- The H Line will end at Southmoor Station, and customers continuing downtown will need to connect to the E Line. The E and H lines will maintain 15-minute frequencies to support customer transfers.
- The L Line will be temporarily suspended during the project, and bus Route 43 will provide customers with continued connections along the downtown corridor.
- Bus Route 0L provides all-day connections seven days a week between the I-25/Broadway and Civic Center stations.
- Bus Route 16 and the ART District Connector will provide service near the Colfax at Auraria Station.
